

Top 100 Models

Runway models

These models are usually seen on the ramp and are hired to represent a designer's clothing line.

Swimsuit & lingerie model

These models specialise in showing off either swimsuits or lingerie.

Commercial models

This modelling type is the most open to diverse and new talent. Commercial models advertise a wide range of products in catalogues, campaigns, and commercials.

Fitness models

These models tend to be fit, toned, and athletically built. This of course makes sense as these models are tasked with wearing fitness attire.

Part model

Parts Models specialize in modelling their hands, arms, feet, and legs. A hand model can book a job involving jewellery, whereas a foot model can book a job with a shoe company.

Fashion models

These models are the faces you see in high fashion magazines such as Vogue and Elle. Editorial models also usually work for top designers such as Marc Jacobs, Prada, and Gucci.
